2.2 Read the case study below and answer the questions that follow.

CREDIT AMNESTY: MILLIONS OF CONSUMERS SCORE

About 3,18 million consumers in South Africa benefited from regulations allowing for the removal of negative consumer credit information. Adverse information has been removed from consumer credit records.

Affordability assessment regulations have been prepared to tighten credit assessment by credit providers to prevent reckless lending and borrowing. These regulations require the verification of income disclosed by consumers, obtaining credit reports and approving credit timeously.

According to the credit ombudsman, Manie van Schalkwyk, not all negative information is removed from consumer profiles, but only two categories of information, namely adverse listing and paid-up judgements.

Adverse listing includes delinquent, default, slow-paying, absconding and non-contactable consumers. Even if the default information is removed from consumers' credit profiles, they are still legally obliged to pay the debt. If this is not done, they open themselves up for legal action by the credit provider or for being handed over to debt collectors.

[Adapted from Fin24, 3 November 2014]
